EXPLANATORY REMARKS

The CHECK LETTERS for general use are the following:

D	E	F	G	H	I	J	K	L	M	N	O	P	Q	R
0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14
15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	27

The CHECK LETTER is determined by first adding together the check figures of the three lettergroups.

1. The check letter PRECEDES the code letter groups !
2. Three groups of 3 letters each are joined, after which the check letter is appended, thus forming 10 letters, i.e. two code words of 5 letters each;
3. OR ELSE this is done at the end of the telegram, so that it becomes unnecessary to use groups of three; OR ELSE, if the telegraphic text is interrupted by code words from another code, making it unnecessary to use groups of three, then two groups of 3 letters each are joined and a check letter is appended, resulting in two code words, one consisting of 5 letters and one of 2 letters;
4. OR ELSE, to a group of 3 letters the check letter is appended, together forming a code word consisting of 4 letters.

SEE THE EXAMPLES GIVEN

PRIVATE CODES.

Although THE MOST ECONOMICAL CODE is a general code, it is very easy indeed, by means of a simple change, to transform it into a private code.

For example, by mixing up the initial letters of the 104,000 five-letter code words and the 15 check-letters (initial letters) of the three-letter code, one may then arbitrarily choose therefrom 15 letters to be used as check letters (initial letters) for communications made in the three-letter code, formulating two-letter groups of the remainder so as to cover the 104,000 five-letter code words. It is also possible, of course, periodically to change the check-letters.

If a firm desires to make use solely of the three-letter code, after, say, it has been found that this code contains all of its telegraphic requirements, or after the necessary additions and alterations have been made to attain this end, so that in such case the 104,000 five-letter code words need not be resorted to, the controlling power of the three-letter code can be further enhanced by using a still greater number of initial letters as check-letters.

OR ELSE, if a firm need not employ any table code, then the initial letters A, B, and C can be added to the 15 initial letters of the three-letter code already indicated.

OR ELSE, should a firm require a more extensive table code, the number of initial letters can be decreased, the minimum for the three-letter code being 10, thus reducing the controlling power to 1 upon 10, a principle which already has been applied for decades past to private table codes.

Such alterations, however, obviously must first be agreed upon between the parties making use of the code.

THE 104,000 FIVE-LETTER CODE WORDS.

(See page 268—271)

The purpose of the 104,000 five-letter code words is to make it possible to employ any five-letter code arbitrarily agreed upon, intermingled with the three-letter code.

Let us suppose that a Company has its own private five-letter code, or that it makes general use of the ABC Sixth Edition, or of Bentley's, etc., and purposes to use both the three-letter code and its customary five-letter code. Then, instead of the code word, the number corresponding to it is taken from the five-letter code, after which the code word corresponding to it in the table of 104,000 five-letter code words is inserted in the telegram instead.

This procedure at the same time ensures a constant availability of the exact phrases required, which with the three-letter code, however carefully this has been compiled, may still occasionally be lacking.

For example: One wishes to telegraph phrase No. 56117 of the ABC 6th Edition (''British & Foreign Marine Insurance Co. Ltd.'').

This phrase is not included in the three-letter code. But in such case one telegraphs:

56 = UG
117 = INS

i.e. UGINS = ''British & Foreign Marine Insurance Co. Ltd.''.

This example clearly indicates how each concern, irrespective of its telegraphic requirements, can effect considerable savings in connection with its code telegrams by making use of the three-letter code, either by itself or in combination with any already existing five-letter code.

The 104,000 code words are arranged in such a way that the discovery of mutilations has been reduced to mere child's play.

As is the case with ALL five-letter codes, each five-letter combination differs by at least two letters from all other five-letter combinations.

Although the columns mutually differ in excess of 100 %, this tabulation generally is to be used for prices and limits that are already more or less known to the parties concerned.

If there is the least likelihood of misapprehension, the column required must be indicated — see Price Column Numbers under Prices — or else state a currency indication followed by a figure.

The number next following must be divided into 3 and 2 figures, respectively; for instance, 04752 into 047 and 52.

When no telegram numbers are indicated, but dates, and if it is intended that they shall refer to the telegram sent out on such date, then one may use for this purpose the two figures reserved for the Number. But one should use either numbers or dates.

If dates are used, the two figures may serve the purpose of indicating a particular date — between the first day of the month before last and the 31st day of the current month — as follows:

01 = 1st day of the month before last
02 = 2nd

FINDING MUTILATIONS IN THE THREE-LETTER CODE

Example from a GENERAL (HARDWARE) IMPORT telegram:

(P)	ABH —3	Accept additional
	MUW—4	35000
	XUH —5	Batavia
	12 = check P

arrives mutilated as follows:

(P)	ABH —3	Accept additional
	GAW —8	telegraph estimate
	XUH —5	Batavia
	16 = check E

The check clearly does not agree, and in this particular instance it is obvious that the words ''telegraph estimate'' are not in consonance with the remainder of the telegram (the difference between being in consonance and not being in consonance is called ''positional difference''), so that one may immediately begin to look for the error or errors in the second three-letter group.

According to the subjoined table, it is almost a certainty that two of the letters have been garbled (there being neither T nor E in the group: see explanation below). GA can change into MU — TX — ZT, so that MUW — 4 = 35000, which agrees with the check applied, and its translation entirely harmonizes with the remainder of the telegram, so that one may be fairly certain that MUW—4 would be the correct rendering.

One should not, however, neglect to demand a repetition.

Mutilations of one letter occur almost solely where T is substituted for E, and vice-versa, or sometimes as a mistake in reading, where C is taken for O, or vice-versa; or as an error in reading or writing (K into H, and vice-versa).

After the simple mutilation of T into E, and vice-versa, two-letter mutilations are the most frequent. In looking for the garbled letters, this should be taken into account. In this connection it must be mentioned that the ''Recorder'' system, with reference to which a good many more simple mutilations can occur, is generally used for overland telegraphy only. Radio messages are transmitted solely by means of the Morse system.

Frequently two-letter combinations, the morse symbols whereof have much resemblance, such as AU, can be mutilated in RA, as well as in AR, and the reverse, which possibilities should be taken into consideration.

Preventive measures:

Make sure that the typewriter on which your code telegrams are typed has clean letters and a good ribbon, so that the letters typed on it are clear and distinct.

Do not allow any erasures in any telegram you wish to despatch.

Capitals are clearest.

Space your code words.

Do not use copying ribbons nor copy your telegrams, for copying causes your letters to be less clear. It is better to have carbon copies made.

Save the drafts of your code telegrams, for some months at least; this will simplify your control in case of mutilation or garbling.

Leave plenty of space between your lines of code words in the telegram to be dispatched.
